Hyder Construction Starts New Columbine Country Club Clubhouse

Hyder Construction is starting work on a $20-million facelift to the Columbine Country Club in Littleton. The original clubhouse will come down this spring to make way for a new 45,000-sq-ft building. The clubhouse will include sophisticated finishes, locker rooms, conference space, dining areas, an auto courtyard, and a 4,000-sq-ft wellness and fitness center.

The high-end facility, designed with European flair by Marsh & Associates, will give members access to modern spaces programmed to their specific needs. The project is scheduled to complete in summer 2017.

Renovations to the club's pool and tennis area are already underway and are expected to be complete by this Memorial Day.

NAMES in the news

MKK Consulting Engineers Inc., a mechanical, electrical, plumbing and sustainable design firm, has added Stephanie Gerakos-Rooker as a mechanical engineer in the firm's Greenwood Village office.

Gerakos-Rooker joins MKK with more than 10 years' experience in HVAC systems design, net-zero-energy solutions and project and client management experience. She was the lead designer on Locust Trace Agriscience Farm, the nation's third net-zero-energy school, featured in Green Building and Design magazine in July/August 2013. In addition to design solutions for institutional clients, Gerakos-Rooker has worked with many hospital systems to retrofit their existing systems, including the Mayo Clinic.

She earned a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from the University of Kentucky and a certification in geothermal design.

"We are excited to have Stephanie join our team of innovative engineers," said Angie Huber, MKK's principal and director of production operations. "Her experience working with mission-critical facilities like hospitals serves a growing client base that has specialized mechanical system needs. Couple this expertise with sustainable, geothermal design implementation, and owner relationship management, and Stephanie is an exceptionally valuable addition to our team."

RUSH - TIME VALUE NEWSPAPER

Craig Hospital Expansion, Renovation Nears Completion

Photos by Cooperthwaite Photography and Productions

The closing of Clarkson Street unified the Craig Hospital campus, offering safe access to all areas for patients, families and staff, while the expansive curtain wall floods the interiors with natural light, a key component of the hospital's healing environment.

By Sue Rose

With a target completion date set for late 2016, Craig Hospital's $90-million expansion and renovation is nearing completion. In addition, the hospital recently announced it has exceeded its $68-million fundraising target by $5 million.

The Craig Hospital expansion is the result of close collaboration early in the design process between architect-of-record RTA Architects and partner design firm SmithGroupJJR, as well as general contractor GE Johnson Construction and hospital rehabilitation staff.

When initial planning started in the winter of 2012, the team worked to resolve an extremely complex problem: how to build a new facility in and around an occupied traumatic brain injury (TBI) and spinal cord injuries (SCI) rehabilitation hospital with minimal disruption to patients and staff.

A critical starting point was to call in experts from all disciplines and break the large project into 22 phases. Planning took a full year, which began with a week of immersion meetings by the design team at the hospital campus. Using an integrated project approach with the general contractor, the team co-located at the campus during concept and pre-schematic design to complete the plan, the design and the budget. The project team continues to meet on-site to collaborate through completion.

Collaborative Environment

The theme of collaboration extends throughout the facility. The new staff workstations are designed to encourage a team-oriented environment for therapists, doctors and nurses. Cozy bistros are located on each patient level, offering space for families and staff to share meals with patients. Patient hallways are flared to widen at the north end to create spacious sitting areas while accommodating the expansive windows that stream daylight down the hallways.

Details and finishes of the hospital reflect the collaborative nature of the design. The building has sand-colored walls that feature thematic nature-based artwork, and sound-absorptive rubber flooring and acoustical ceiling tiles create a tranquil atmosphere for patients. Even the lighting is designed to bathe the walls with warm, indirect light so that patients in wheelchairs don't have to look up into glaring ceiling lights.

Because the needs of TBI patients differ from those who have sustained SCIs, the two groups have been given separate levels of the hospital. The top floor (level four) houses SCI patients and their brightly colored, active therapy gym.

TBI patients are treated on level three, a quieter floor with an equally tranquil gym.

Exterior Features

Outside the front entrance, architects designed a sensory garden, complete with wheelchair paths and raised plant containers positioned precisely at the height of a patient seated in a wheelchair so they are able to touch and smell the growing foliage.

Water features stimulate auditory development. The chapel, which is nearly complete, features a cork floor and a white-stone accent wall with recessed shelves that can carry items from any faith.

Craig's PEAK Community Outpatient Rehabilitation Center has doubled in size, with technology as its man feature. The floor of the therapy pool functions as an automated lift so that clients and patients in wheelchairs can be lowered into the pool, eliminating the need for a separate transfer lift.

Although the footprint of Craig has expanded from 135,000 to 220,000 sq ft, the patient capacity remains the same because the new facility offers private suites with ample space for family to visit and confer with physicians and the rehab team. According to RTA Architects' Paul Reu, all of the 52 beds are occupied, and the hospital maintains a waiting list.

Reu says that the only pieces remaining to be completed are Craig's outpatient clinic, the outpatient therapy center, resident doctors' office and kitchen and server renovations in the main cafeteria.

The hospital's PEAK Community Outpatient Rehabilitation Center hums with activity.
